The Reading Phoenix Choir, a 50 strong mixed voice choir, is considered one of the finest amateur choirs in the UK. It has members of all backgrounds and ages, with musical experience ranging from music degrees / diplomas to average sight readers, all sharing a love of choral music.

Phoenix explores the whole range of a capella music, early and contemporary, sacred and secular, serious and light. The choir has given over 20 first performances of specially commissioned pieces. In August 2011 the choir kicked off its 43rd season with a concert at the London A Capella Festival.

The choir has featured regularly on BBC radio and TV. It gives concerts in the UK and internationally for churches, charities and schools. It first performed in the High Street Church in 1994, and has returned every two years.
